

In the six months to June 2011, Virgin recorded its third consecutive increase in Mobile Phone Service Provider Satisfaction, with 81% of Australians aged 14+ being either 'Very' or 'Fairly' satisfied. Telstra also continued to improve, with marginal improvements in customer satisfaction to 66%.

Optus (71%) and 3 (69%) recorded slight declines but were still above the stable industry average (68%). Vodafone's customer satisfaction declined again to 61%. Mobile Phone Service Provider Customer Satisfaction Source: Roy Morgan Single Source (July 2010 - June 2011). Total main user of at least one mobile phone and gave provider (n=14,497). 'Satisfied' refers to the proportion of all customers who are 'Very' or 'Fairly' satisfied with their overall service with that mobile phone service provider (on a five point scale). Total industry figure excludes those who 'can't say' their provider. NOTE: Satisfaction score is provided by the respondent for the brand that the respondent has a relationship with. Andrew Braun, Director Mobile, Internet and Technology, Roy Morgan Research, says: 'Additional Roy Morgan Research data shows that the overall number of customers who have switched from one provider to another has declined since December 2010 (with only 12% having switched in the six months to June 2011, compared to 13.4% who switched in the six months to December 2010). The ongoing industry trends of stable customer satisfaction and a decline in overall churn will be welcome news to a number of players in the industry.'
