Since the beginning of time, knives of all sorts have been essential tools to our existence. Imagine what a versatile tool it was for our ancestors; they could use it to mortally wound the evening meal, and then used the tool to skin the hide and slice up the fodder. They could even stick a juicy morsel of meat on the end of the knife and heat it over the roaring fire. No need to burn your fingers taking it off the knife, because it conveniently holds your food while you eat. Surely, knives were, and still are, one of the greatest tools ever invented. Knives evolved with civilization, and their uses came more specialized.
