

2012 Urban Design Awards Announced

Architecture

Urban design has the ability to transform built landscapes with greater impact than any other industry facet. Moving beyond single buildings, the impact of these projects are magnified as single projects have the ability to change the face of a city and bring a new identity to a space that was beforehand recognized.

Recognizing those who achieve these feats are Architecture Canada |RAIC, the Canadian Institute of Planners (CIP) and the Canadian Society of Landscape Architects (CSLA) who have announced the recipients of the 2012 National Urban Design Awards.

According to the above cohort of architectural authority, the Urban design Awards program was 'established to recognize individuals, organizations, firms and projects located in Canada that have contributed to the quality of life in our Canadian cities and their sustainability'.
