

Bookabin (AUS) Say It's Not a Good Idea to Overload Your Skip Bin

Whether you are using a skip bin for moving house, home renovations, or a commercial project, you might be tempted to overfill it. It seems like a good idea, as the assumption is that you will save money, it's easier than getting another one, and there's no harm in it. However, Bookabin say that overloading a skip bin is actually dangerous, illegal, and costly. Read on to find out why you shouldn't overload a skip bin, and to learn how to safely load it.

It is dangerous to overload your skip bin, as it puts you, your neighbours, and even your family at risk. There will be sharp, broken items sticking out the top and this could easily hurt passers-by, or those handling the skip bin. Also, if it is overflowing, then items can fall out and land on someone or roll into the street. When an overfilled skip bin is in transit, it is especially hazardous, as debris can fly out and land on the road or hit another vehicle.

It may seem like you are saving money by overfilling your skip bin, but in fact it will mean more costs in the long run. If your skip bin is overloaded, then the truck driver who is meant to pick it up could refuse to take it. This is because the skip may exceed weight restrictions and could damage the truck and put the driver at risk. In this situation you will have to pay extra costs to have the waste removed.

The main thing you need to know when loading your skip bin is that you can't fill it higher than the sides of the bin. On most skip bins there is a red 'fill line' which shows the limit of where your waste can be filled to, and you should stick to this. It is usually obvious if you have overfilled it, so don't make the mistake of thinking that you will get away with it – just remove any excess and keep to the limit.

Finally, don't underestimate how much waste you have to remove, and be realistic about the skip size you need. Even though you may want to save money, if you choose one that is too small and overfill it, you will have to pay more. To find out what size skip bin you need, and for more information on skip bins South Australia, skip bin sizes and skip bin hire costs please go to <https://www.bookabin.com.au> .

Contacts

Bookabin AU

mailto: