Utilising NASA technology for training astronauts for replicating weightless flight and Zero G gravity the new VULY AIR trampoline is a world first Australian invention by the Brisbane based company. The new Vuly Air trampoline will create 70 new tech and manufacturing jobs and generate over $50 million in export sales in the first 12 months.

Vuly Trampolines founder Joe Andon says " An anti-gravitational trampoline has always been a dream of mine. Our R & D team has been working on this for 7 years. Now it's come to fruition. At Vuly we want to make the impossible, possible. Vuly Air is a game changer. It will create 70 new tech and manufacturing jobs in South East Queensland and over $50 million in export sales globally during the first 12 months. It already has other applications. We've been in discussions with Richard Branson's people in the UK about utilising our technology for aviation and long haul flights to assist in reducing deep vein thrombosis. NASA want to utilise Vuly Air in their astronaut training programme as well as its potential for GPE, Gravitational Potential Energy. However for now this is a product marketed for children from 12+ years (and adults) and is something anyone can have in their backyard. We've taken care of all the magnetic repulsion elements and all a customer has to do is plug it in!"

Joe continues " Vuly Play will be selling this historic Facebook post as an NFT for when we first reveal this anti-gravity technology to the world. Proceeds will be provided to the Australian Olympic Trampoline High Performance Program arranged by Darren Gillis. Like Steve Jobs had his team sign the first Apple computers so we are getting our VULY AIR team to sign and number the " black box" for the first ones off the production line. They will become collectors items."

Numbers 1 to 16 will be gifted as follows to :-
