

Inaugural Australian Space Industry Conference

Places still available

The Space Industry Association of Australia is pleased to announce that next week we will co-host the inaugural Australian Space Industry Conference, being held in conjunction with the Avalon Air Show 2019. The event will take place in Melbourne on Monday 25 February and at the Avalon Airshow on Tuesday 26 February 2019.

“This conference brings together many of the key players in the Australian Space Industry, offering a range of highly credentialed speakers, including an opening address from the Minister for Industry, Science and Technology the Hon Karen Andrews MP, and a keynote address from Mr Anthony Murfett, Deputy Head of the Australian Space Agency. Supported by a stellar group of subject matter experts, covering many key aspects of the space industry, we are confident that there is something in our program for every participant” said Rod Drury, Chair of the SIAA. “We aim to ensure that everyone who attends has the opportunity to hear the latest from a diverse cross-section of industry participants, generate some fresh ideas, and that they are able to capitalise on a number of networking opportunities being offered as part of the event program.”

Although interest has been strong, there are still some tickets available. To register go to <https://www.airshow.com.au/airshow2019/TRADE/Conferences/SIAA/registration.asp>
