

INDIGENOUS YOUTHS DEADLY DANCE MOVES GO VIRAL

An Indigenous boy from Mount Isa has burnt up the local PCYC Youth Zone dance floor to the delight of onlookers, and the video has gone viral. Despite eleven year-old Anton Sambo and his happy feet being newcomers to the Outback mining town, the welcome he received from PCYC has been warming.

Youth Engagement Officer Aimee Sewell said the video has been watched over 87 000 times on various Facebook pages and shared more than 150 times.

"We put the music on and off he went. He loves to dance and he learned from watching other people and YouTube," Officer Sewell said.

Since Anton's deadly dance moves aired he was invited as a special guest to watch the Mount Isa School of Dance end of year concert.

"He thoroughly enjoyed it and left even more inspired to dance," Officer Sewell said.

The PCYC Youth Zone opened in September 2019 and runs activities on Wednesday and Thursdays from 4-6pm.

"Our aim is to break down barriers and build relationships between young people and Police and we do this by providing positive experiences in a fun and supportive environment."

"It's a very versatile and safe space," she said.

The Youth Zone offers a range of activities such as box fit circuit, handball, soccer, obstacle courses, basketball and team challenges."

After reading about such a lovely and heartwarming article the crew at Cindication would like to wish everyone a Stress-free and Merry Christmas.

Cindication is aware that Christmas can be a tough time of year for families however we also recognise the Police Service and other frontline personnel have a tough job as well.

Founder of Cindication CEO Cindy Rochstein said not many people recognise that those in law enforcement work tirelessly during the holiday season to keep communities safe.

"Cindication is committed to continuing to provide awareness around trauma and PTSD and work towards those looking for solutions with events and a symposium due to be held in 2020," Ms Rochstein said.
