

“Love knows no age” – a new dating app not based on age

Gaper is a new online dating app where “age is just a number”

Move over Tinder, Gaper is the new innovative age gap dating app on the block where matches are not determined by age.

The app is designed for males and females around the world who like to date younger or older people regardless of the age gap.

“Our new app gives people the ability to create relationships with others on the app, even if they are younger or older. The only restriction we have on our app is that users need to be over the age of 18 to join. We want to provide people with a platform where singles are free to date who they want no matter what age,” said a CEO of Gaper, Easton Chen.

With instant messaging, picture sharing and a protection censor to ensure all profiles are real, Gaper is opening up a new revolution to online dating. Unlike other dating apps, Gaper allows users to search through all those available on the app, there is no “match” process - someone using the app is free to message anyone they are interested in.

“Gaper is strictly not a ‘sugar daddy – sugar baby’ relationship finder app. It is about real people finding others they connect with no matter what the age gap is. It is about making no boundaries or limitations, whether that is age or distance. These relationships are based on trust and loyalty,” continued Easton.

Gaper is an app for iPhone and Android and is available through the Apple and Google Play store.
