

Uniden introduces headsets and adds more car kits to its Bluetooth range

Uniden has strengthened its commitment to a world without wires with the addition of four exciting Bluetooth products to its extensive wireless range.

The new releases include one combined Bluetooth wireless stereo speaker and car kit – the BTSC 1300, a Bluetooth car kit – BTSC 1100, and two Bluetooth headsets - the BTHS 800 and BTHS 500. All can be paired with iPhones, Blackberrys, Nokias and all other Bluetooth-enabled devices. Equipped with a powerful stereo speaker, the compact BTSC 1300 is designed for streaming music from mobile phones and mp3 players. Utilising the latest noise and echo cancellation technology, the BTSC 1300 also doubles as a car kit making it the ideal companion for those on the go. For easy portability, its unique design features both a versatile slide-on clip for use on car seatbelts or backpack straps, as well as an integrated desktop stand. Slim and unobtrusive, the BTSC 1100 car kit offers a full duplex speaker and can be connected to two phones at the same time. Like the BTSC 1300, it features Text to Speech caller ID number announce, voice dialling and noise and echo cancellation technology. The BTSC 1100's design allows for it to effortlessly slide on to a car's sun visor. Uniden's two new headsets are the company's first since entering the Bluetooth market with its BTHS 1500 car kit in August 2009. Ultra-discreet, the top-of-the-line BTHS 800 offers dual microphone E2 technology that completely eliminates background noise for crystal clear communication. The entry-level BTHS 500 is a more affordable alternative and, like the BTHS 800, has multi-point pairing allowing you to connect an audio device and mobile phone simultaneously. Common to both headsets is A2DP support for streaming music from Bluetooth enabled mobile devices, voice dialling and up to four hours talk time. For comfort, both headsets include three different sizes of inner ear buds as well as two flexible ear hooks and weigh just 10 grams. Uniden's new range of Bluetooth car kits and headsets are now available from leading electrical retailers and department stores.
