

Watts McCray Law Firm Moves into Platinum Building

Family law firm Watts McCray has a new location in Erina. Its Central Coast office is now located at the Platinum Building. Watts McCray Managing Director Jacqueline Vincent welcomed guests including lawyers and other professionals to share an evening of good company while inaugurating the office.

Jacqueline spoke of the terrific team of lawyers including, Kate O'Grady, Michelle Meares and Matthew Weston, and the support staff in the Erina office as well as the collaborative support provided to and by colleagues of each of the other Watts McCray offices in Sydney, Parramatta, Norwest and Canberra. Watts McCray looks forward to continuing to work with the business community on the Central Coast to deliver timely, tailored legal services, the company stated on their website.

Originally with one office located in Parramatta, Watts McCray Lawyers has now grown to include seven offices across the Sydney, ACT, and Central Coast markets, including their newest offices at Platinum Building in New South Wales and Norwest Business Park in Sydney. With ten directors/partners supported by a team of highly experienced solicitors, Watts McCray is highly regarded by clients, the Judiciary and the marketplace overall.

Their seven locations are ideally situated to ensure convenience for clients across Greater Sydney, the Central Coast, and the Australian Capital Territory. Through the use of technology, they are able to file and conduct proceedings for clients not only in any Sydney, Canberra, Parramatta or Newcastle Registry, but also in any registry around Australia. They can also assist clients in respect of the impact of Australian Law in the event there are proceedings being conducted overseas.
